Mining at Rushton

Increasing shareholder pressures for return on investment, coupled with technological developments, drive a greater emphasis on increasing the efficiency and lifespan of mining sector assets.

In today's fast changing mining sector, any downtime caused by a loss can be very costly, especially when coupled with the high value and long lead time for obtaining replacement assets. Reducing the risk of underinsurance through an accurate valuation is a key consideration for the sector. It is no longer good enough for multinationals to simply rely on historic data, asset registers and indices to correctly represent the true value of assets held.

The valuation of mining assets is a highly technical and complex skill. Rushton International has an established and experienced team which has worked with some of the biggest names in the sector. Our expert knowledge gives clients visibility on their entire business assets, no matter the global location or currency. By delivering correct reinstatement values, mining clients can make more effective risk assessment decisions and be assured that assets are appropriately covered in the event of a loss.

Case Study

We were appointed to value a gold mining facility located in the USA. The overall facility included open pit mines, underground mines and processing operations including heap leaching, crushing, grinding, precious metal recovery, carbon treatment, carbon reactivation and refining. The facility produced close to two million ounces of gold per annum.

The valuation assignment involved the assessment of all assets for insurance purposes including plant, equipment, buildings, mine improvements, tailing dams and permanent underground works. Our tailored valuation report included an allocation of value across each main operation to assist with risk management studies.
